

Kristin Lord

Kristin Lord is a Fellow in the Foreign Policy Studies Program at The Brookings Institution, where she directs the science and technology task force of the Project on U.S. Relations with the Islamic World. In addition, Dr. Lord is leading a major study on U.S. public diplomacy.

Prior to joining Brookings, Dr. Lord was Associate Dean for Strategy, Research, and External Relations at The George Washington University's Elliott School of International Affairs. In that capacity, she oversaw the School's six research centers, graduate admissions, public affairs, and strategic initiatives. During her twelve year tenure at the Elliott School, she launched three master's programs, ten certificate programs, a global network of university partnerships, the School's skills curriculum, and numerous educational programs for students, diplomats, and mid-career professionals from the public, private, and non-profit sectors. As a member of the faculty, she also taught courses on U.S. public diplomacy, U.S. foreign policy and the causes of war.

In 2005-2006, Lord served as a Council on Foreign Relations International Affairs Fellow and Special Adviser to the Under Secretary of State for Democracy and Global Affairs. In that role, she worked on a wide range of issues including international science and technology cooperation, international health, democracy and the rule of law, communications, and public diplomacy.

Dr. Lord is the author of Perils and Promise of Global Transparency: Why the Information Revolution May Not Lead to Security Democracy or Peace, (SUNY Press, 2006; paperback 2007), Power and Conflict in an Age of Transparency, edited with Bernard I. Finel (Palgrave Macmillan, 2000), and numerous book chapters, reports, and articles. In 2008, she published the Brookings report A New Millennium of Knowledge? The Arab Human Development Report on Building a Knowledge Society, Five Years On.

Dr. Lord is a non-resident fellow at the University of Southern California's Center for Public Diplomacy and served as a non-resident Fellow at Brookings in 2007-2008. In 2006-2007, Dr. Lord served as project director of a Council on Foreign Relations study group entitled "Beyond Institutions: Building Cultural Support for the Rule of Law." She received her M.A. and Ph.D. in Government from Georgetown University and her B.A., magna cum laude, in international studies from American University.