GLOBAL CITIES INITIATIVE
A JOINT PROJECT OF BROOKINGS AND JPMORGAN CHASE
COLUMBUS, OHIO
WEDNESDAY, MAY 9, 2012
On behalf of the Global Cities Initiative, a joint project of the Brookings Metropolitan Policy Program and JPMorgan Chase & Co., we would like to welcome you to the Ohio Global Cities forum hosted by The Ohio State University. With this convening, we hope to bring together a select group of senior government, business, civic, and philanthropic leaders from throughout Ohio and beyond to explore new data and strategies that can further enhance the ability of the state and its metropolitan regions to compete globally.

As we emerge from the Great Recession, it is clear that our nation’s economy must be purposefully restructured from one focused inward and characterized by excessive consumption and debt to one that is globally engaged and driven by production and innovation. A growing chorus of leaders is calling for a new growth model, one that creates more and better jobs by engaging rising global demand and attracting global talent and capital. These leaders recognize that only by harnessing the power of cities and metropolitan areas can we hope to foster job growth in the near term and restructure our economy for the long haul.

This new imperative forms the basis for the Global Cities Initiative (GCI). Over the next five years, GCI will help U.S. city and metropolitan leaders become more globally fluent, learn new strategies for expanding their global economic reach, and connect with like-minded leaders from across the U.S. and throughout the world. Supported by objective research and trend analysis from Brookings, and sustained through domestic and global forums convened each year, GCI will provide leaders with opportunities to explore the distinctive economic strengths of U.S. and global metropolitan areas. Through GCI, we will forge an international network of leaders from global cities intent on trading and growing together.

Today’s forum is an important part of this new endeavor. We believe that Ohio’s metropolitan areas hold tremendous potential for economic growth in the years ahead. The speakers and panels you will hear from today will provide context on the state’s position in the global marketplace and offer insight into how state and metropolitan leaders can work together and with international partners to expand global trade and enhance Ohio’s economic prosperity.

We are excited to have you join us for what promises to be a substantive and engaging forum.

GLOBAL CITIES INITIATIVE
A JOINT PROJECT OF BROOKINGS AND JPMORGAN CHASE

Rapid urbanization is shifting the locus of global economic power. As swift growth in rising nations creates new markets and expands trade opportunities, American business and civic leaders are realizing that the time has come for major U.S. urban and metropolitan areas to more fully engage in the global marketplace.

The Global Cities Initiative is a five-year initiative to equip the leaders of metropolitan America with the tools they need to strengthen their regional economies by meeting demand abroad and attracting global capital and talent at home. Combining Brookings' deep expertise in metro-focused research and JPMorgan Chase's longstanding commitment to investing in cities, this initiative will:

➤ Help U.S. city and metropolitan leaders and their state and private sector counterparts better leverage their global assets by unveiling the economic starting point of their communities on such key indicators as exports, advanced manufacturing, foreign direct investment, freight flows, and immigration.

➤ Provide these leaders with proven, tangible ideas for how to expand the global reach of their economies, building on best practices and policy innovations from across the nation and around the world.

➤ Create an international network of leaders from global cities intent upon deepening global trade relationships.

The Global Cities Initiative is chaired by Richard M. Daley, former mayor of Chicago and a senior advisor to JPMorgan Chase, and directed by Bruce Katz, Brookings vice president and co-director of the Metropolitan Policy Program.

GOING GLOBAL: BOOSTING OHIO’S ECONOMIC FUTURE

The Ohio Global Cities forum is a one-day convening to catalyze high-level discussion of Ohio's metropolitan areas' position in the world economy and the actions that metro leaders can take to improve trade relationships with cities in mature and rising markets.

Hosted by The Ohio State University, the forum aims to bring together distinguished regional, national, and international leaders from the business, civic, government, and philanthropic communities to:

➤ Explore how Ohio's metropolitan areas can enhance their ability to compete globally by focusing on the interplay between advanced research, advanced industries, skilled workers, foreign direct investment and sophisticated export promotion and finance.

➤ Expand the vision for metropolitan-led economic growth and job creation, driven by global trade and investment.

➤ Cultivate support among public and private sector leaders for regional actions to strengthen global economic competitiveness.

➤ Determine how Ohio’s metropolitan areas can accelerate the pace of global economic engagement with other global cities in emerging and established markets.

At the forum, Brookings will release “Locating American Manufacturing: Trends in the Geography of Production,” new research on the manufacturing landscape of the largest 100 metropolitan areas in the country, including Akron, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Toledo and Youngstown.
