Scientific Freedom and Responsibility Award, American Association for the Advancement of Science, 2003

Citation :

For strongly advocating human rights, effectively protesting crimes against humanity, and promoting the social responsibilities of health care professionals and scientists, Walter Reich, the Yitzhak Rabin Memorial Professor of International Affairs, Ethics and Human Behavior at George Washington University, has been named to receive the highly coveted AAAS 2003 Scientific Freedom and Responsibility Award.

The award is presented annually to honor scientists and engineers whose exemplary actions have served to foster scientific freedom and responsibility.

In the 1970s, Reich learned how the adoption of pseudo-scientific psychiatric diagnostic system in the Soviet Union served to curb dissent and stifle dissenters. He worked assiduously to educate policymakers and members of the scientific and psychiatric communities regarding this distortion of psychiatry. Reich's revelations shocked the international community, and his persistence paid off when the international psychiatric association adopted a position condemning these practices, despite the objections of the Soviets and their allies.

Reich's systematic investigation of Soviet psychiatric practices, including interviews with leading Soviet psychiatrists, taught him that many practitioners in that country were cynically using the system to stifle dissent, while others genuinely believed that anyone who disagreed with the Soviet system and government must be mentally ill. Dissenters were often diagnosed as suffering from "sluggish schizophrenia," an illness not recognized by physicians in any other country. This abuse of psychiatry allowed the Soviet government to hospitalize dissidents, thus avoiding embarrassing public trials. In fact, dissenters, including those undergoing extreme and risky treatments, began to question their own sanity. Understanding as he did that of all the medical specialties, psychiatry is perhaps most at risk for this type of misuse, Reich also examined diagnostic practices in the United States, to ensure that similar abuses would not occur. This examination led Reich to the conclusion that in this country, aberrant and unacceptable behavior is increasingly excused by attaching a psychiatric label to it, thereby undermining the concept of personal responsibility for one's behavior.

In addition to his position at the George Washington University, Reich is a senior scholar at the Woodrow Wilson International Center for Scholars, Contributing Editor of the Wilson Quarterly, lecturer in psychiatry at Yale University, and a professor at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences. Born in wartime Poland, he has written extensively on instances of genocide in the world today, and served as director of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum from 1995-1998, where he founded the Center for Advanced Holocaust Studies and oversaw the creation of the Museum's Committee on Conscience, which alerts the world to emerging genocides.

Reich earned his bachelor's degree in 1965 from Columbia University and his M.D. in 1970 from the New York University School of Medicine. In 1973, following his psychiatric residency at the Yale University School of Medicine, Reich joined the National Institute of Mental Health in Bethesda, MD. While at the Woodrow Wilson Center, he studied the political abuse of psychiatry in the Soviet Union; the psychology of terrorism; and the scientific, ethical and public policy dimensions of health care.

The Award recognizes scientists and engineers who have acted to protect the public's health, safety, or welfare; or focused public attention on important potential impacts of science and technology on society by their responsible participation in public policy debates; or established important new precedents in carrying out the social responsibilities or in defending the professional freedom of scientists and engineers.

Human Rights Award, American Psychiatric Association, 2004

Citation:

Walter Reich, M.D., has devoted much of his professional and personal life to the protection of human rights around the world. During the 1970's and 1980's, with colleagues in the American Psychiatric Association, he spearheaded the organization's successful international efforts to condemn the Soviet abuse of psychiatry to suppress political dissent. At the same time, he undertook an original and systematic study of the Soviet psychiatric theories that formed the basis for the misdiagnoses of dissidents. As a result, he identified the ways in which the authors of those theories gained control over psychiatric teaching, research and practice in that country and highlighted the surprising degree to which, as a result, even some Soviet psychiatrists came to believe that healthy dissidents were ill. In so doing, Dr. Reich demonstrated the vulnerability of psychiatric diagnosis everywhere to political abuse.

Dr. Reich has inspired and fostered the effort to protect human rights not only in his prominent public writings public but also through his leadership of organizations and institutions—as a member of the Committee on Scientific Freedom and Responsibility of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, as a member and then Chair of the American Psychiatric Association's Committee on Human Rights, and as Co-Chair of the Committee of Concerned Scientists. During his service as the Director of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, he was instrumental in establishing its Committee on Conscience, which monitors emerging genocides around the world. His writings on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict have focused on the human dimensions of that tragic struggle, a focus that continues in his current role as the Yitzhak Rabin Memorial Professor of International Affairs, Ethics and Human Behavior at The George Washington University.

In recognition of his leadership in the field of human rights, Dr. Reich was just awarded the coveted 2003 Scientific Freedom and Responsibility Award of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Bradley Lecturer, American Enterprise Institute, Washington, D.C., November 14, 2005.

Title of lecture: "The Use and Abuse of Holocaust Memory."

Named Distinguished Life Fellow of the American Psychiatric Association at the Convocation of Distinguished Fellows of the American Psychiatric Association in Toronto on May 23, 2006
