Brookings and Washington University: A 100-Year History

WashU at Brookings's origin lies in Robert S. Brookings's passion for improving government effectiveness. In 1916, he helped create the Institute for Government Research, the first private organization dedicated to the fact-based study of public policy issues.

In addition to policy research, Brookings wanted to develop strong public leaders and "turn out craftsmen who can make contributions to an intelligent direction of social change." To accomplish this purpose, he created the Robert S. Brookings Graduate School in 1924. The research institutions and school merged in 1927 to create the Brookings Institution.

Since then, the Brookings Institution has supported the men and women who serve the country. In fact, WashU at Brookings's predecessor, the Brookings Center for Advanced Study, was the first organization to provide executive education for government leaders.

In 2009, the Brookings Institution partnered with Washington University in St. Louis to establish Brookings Executive Education – now WashU at Brookings. The university's Olin Business School manages the enterprise. WashU at Brookings's curriculum prepares you to streamline your agency; tackle large, complex challenges; and solve problems for the American people.

The Government's Business School

Businessman and philanthropist Robert S. Brookings had a vision: to equip public leaders with the management skills to transform government. In 1924, he established the Robert S. Brookings Graduate School in Washington, D.C. The school originally was an extension of Washington University in St. Louis. Robert S. Brookings was chair of the university's Board of Trustees.

More than eight decades later, a partnership between the university and the Brookings Institution reinvigorated his vision. The collaboration created Brookings Executive Education, an enterprise that has served as "the government's business school" since 2009.

As the enterprise enters its second decade, it is expanding its degree and nondegree offerings. This singular range of educational opportunities inspired a new name. Brookings Executive Education is now WashU at Brookings.

Faculty from the university's Olin Business School translate innovative business models and methods to government settings. Experts from the Brookings Institution provide forward-looking insights into the many public policy challenges facing the nation. Together, they offer a unique blend of expertise that prepares you to excel in an environment of volatility, uncertainty, complexity, and ambiguity – or what the military refers to as "VUCA."

This year, WashU at Brookings is adding several courses to its curriculum. These leadership labs focus on frameworks and tools that were not organizational practices when the government created the Executive Core Qualifications in 1989. Subject areas include strategic foresight, supply chain management, agile management, and data analytics.

WashU at Brookings also has launched "Think, Learn, Lead" faculty papers. Instructors convert their research into "views you can use" on a breadth of important topics. Access the papers on the Brookings Institution website: www.brookings.edu/think-learn-lead.

To mark the 10th anniversary of the partnership, Olin will open new facilities on the Brookings Institution campus – directly across the street from the main Brookings building at 1776 Massachusetts Avenue, NW, Washington, D.C. The eighth floor will be dedicated to WashU at Brookings with two state-of-the-art classrooms. Each classroom can accommodate up to 50 students.

Programs

Certificate in Public Leadership

WashU at Brookings's Certificate in Public Leadership (CPL) is a widely recognized – and widely respected – credential. The certificate strengthens your ability to guide and inspire employees, solve complex problems, and lead with integrity. While pursuing the CPL, you acquire a cross-government network of leaders who share your commitment to public service and provide a wealth of knowledge and resources.

To earn your certificate, you must complete 20 days of classroom learning, including the required Ethics in Action: Leading with Integrity course. Ten of these days must be leadership courses.

In addition, you must write a three- to five-page paper that describes your reflection on, and application of, class content, along with the results you achieved for your organization.

Choose courses that fit your career interests and objectives. You do not have to take classes in a specific order or finish the program within a certain time frame.

Note: You must be enrolled in the CPL to receive course credit for the certificate. However, credit is retroactive to WashU at Brookings courses you attended within a two-year period prior to enrollment. You also earn class credit for any WashU at Brookings course taught at your agency.

There is no application or fee to enroll.

Eligibility and requirements

- Open to all U.S. federal, state, and local government employees
- Twenty total class days (10 class days of leadership courses)
- One required course: Ethics in Action: Leading with Integrity
- A three- to five-page paper on your application of class content in your organization

Certificate in Policy Strategy

Policy formulation and implementation are complex, dynamic, ongoing processes. As a result, earning your WashU at Brookings's Certificate in Policy Strategy (CPS) is a competitive advantage in both the public and private sectors.

WashU at Brookings policy courses provide analytical tools and knowledge that help you engage more effectively in government decision making, predict likely policy outcomes, and leverage windows of opportunity. In addition, the Global Studies series of courses delivers a comprehensive overview of critical world regions and issues.

Note: You must be enrolled in the CPS to receive course credit for the certificate. However, credit is retroactive to WashU at Brookings courses you attended within a two-year period prior to enrollment. You also may apply five days of class credit from policy courses to the Certificate in Public Leadership program.

There is no application or fee to enroll.

Eligibility and requirements

- Open to experienced professionals from government agencies, businesses, and nonprofit organizations
- Six required courses: Inside Congress, Inside the White House, Insider's Legs and Regs, Insider's Budget Process, Politics and Policymaking, and U.S. National Security Strategy
- Two to three policy electives totaling four class days

To enroll in either certificate program, contact registrar@brookings.edu or call 800-925-5730.

EXEC Fellowship

WashU at Brookings's nine-month EXEC Fellowship focuses on enterprise leadership – serving the best interests of an entire organization rather than the needs of a single business unit or functional area.

The program is designed for professionals with demonstrated leadership ability who already have mastered fundamental competencies. Fellowship courses prepare you for senior-level positions in your organization by stretching your thinking.

Program faculty members bring their research-based, executive-level content to the classroom, creating an interesting, interactive learning environment. During the fellowship, you also engage with Brookings scholars in informal, off-the-record policy discussions.

Equally important, you benefit from the program's cohort format. You attend sessions with the same individuals throughout your fellowship, which encourages you to get to know and learn from other fellows and develop a career-long professional network. After you complete your 20 classroom days, you will be awarded the WashU at Brookings's Certificate in Public Leadership.

Five four-day sessions

The fellowship commences with a 2-hour online orientation session on October 3, 2019 followed by five four-day classroom sessions:

- Session 1: Values-Based Leadership | October 28-31, 2019
- Session 2: Leading Thinking | January 13-16, 2020
- Session 3: Leading Change | February 24-27, 2020
- Session 4: Leading the Organization | May 4-7, 2020
- Session 5: Enterprise Leadership | June 8-11, 2020

Benefits

- Combination of content based on Executive Core Qualifications (ECQs) and cutting-edge business practices adapted for government
- Cohort program creates strong bonds with highly committed professionals across government
- Networking opportunities throughout the fellowship
- Receipt of powerful credential: the Certificate in Public Leadership

Admissions requirements

- Minimum GS-14 grade level or agency equivalent
- Application
- Current résumé
- Approximately 300-word statement describing how the fellowship will enhance your career
- Recommendation from your supervisor
- Approved and signed training form, with a valid billing address and purchase-order number

Tuition: $14,500

Application deadline: August 30, 2019

For more information or to apply, go to www.brookings.edu/fellowships-programs/exec-fellowship.

LEGIS Congressional Fellowship

Work with U.S. legislators and their staffs on Capitol Hill. Learn about policy development and the legislative process. Connect with key decision makers and power brokers. And join a national network of policy entrepreneurs.

For 25 years, WashU at Brookings's LEGIS Congressional Fellowship has been known for the rich, rewarding experience it provides the participants it attracts. Fellows come to the program from government agencies, businesses, and the nonprofit sector.

A former member of Congress and WashU at Brookings's associate dean oversee the fellowship. It begins with an in-depth, eight-day orientation that introduces you to the mechanics of the legislative process. Next, you immerse yourself in legislative activity, participate in committee hearings, draft legislation, brief members of Congress on important issues, write speeches, and serve as a constituent liaison.

Note: LEGIS fellows can apply class credit for the Inside Congress and Insider's Budget Process courses to the Certificate in Policy Strategy.

Benefits

- Combination of content based on Executive Core Qualifications (ECQs) and cutting-edge business practices adapted for government
- Cohort program creates strong bonds with highly committed professionals across government

- Networking opportunities throughout the fellowship
- Receipt of powerful credential: the Certificate in Public Leadership

Women's Leadership Program

WashU at Brookings's Women's Leadership Program advances the unique abilities and perspectives of women – which, in turn, helps them improve the performance of their organizations. During the program, you acquire the skills and mindset to excel as a woman executive.

In a work world with increasingly horizontal and fluid organizational structures, traits common to women – like collaborative, group-oriented behavior – are fundamental to professional success. Leveraging these strengths helps women lead with empathy and purpose.

The Women's Leadership Program is an extraordinary learning experience. You form close bonds with your program cohorts, building relationships that will support you throughout your career. The curriculum is distinct from other WashU at Brookings curricula. Course content has been broadened to enhance the professional development of female government, nonprofit, and private-sector executives.

Tuition: $6,500

Courses

- Resonant Leadership
- Negotiating for Success
- Thriving Through Change
- Executive Presence

2019-2020 Cohort I:

Custom Solutions

Work with WashU at Brookings's experts to tailor learning programs to the specific needs and culture of your organization. A series of in-person and online courses are geared to professionals at all stages of their careers. A team of certified coaches supports the goals of your emerging and current leaders. Most of these coaches are retired federal executives with years of leadership experience.

The first step is to engage in comprehensive discussions with you as part of your market research. This phase is critically important to achieving the results you desire. It helps you determine your organization's unique challenges and goals. These conversations also inform your proposals to senior leadership.

WashU at Brookings collaborates with other firms to provide comprehensive leadership-development programs.

For more information, contact registrar@brookings.edu.

Brookings Executive Education (BEE) On-Site

Less expensive than custom programming, WashU at Brookings's on-site courses – now called Brookings Executive Education (BEE) On-Site – enable your employees to benefit from WashU at Brookings's exceptional content anywhere in the continental United States. Participant travel expenses are eliminated, saving your organization hundreds of dollars per individual. In addition, your per-attendee cost is substantially lowered, especially if 30 employees (maximum) enroll. You purchase classes using the government's Simplified Acquisition Procedures.

BEE On-Site classes cover the same content and are taught by the same instructors as the courses conducted at WashU at Brookings's facilities. Although the on-site courses are not tailored to your specific agency, your employees "customize" the content through their discussions on shared internal issues and challenges.

BEE On-Site participants receive credit toward the Certificate in Public Leadership, a powerful credential.

Benefits

- Cost-effective, high-impact professional development
- Research-driven, application-based content

For more information on BEE On-Site courses, visit www.brookings.edu/on-site-courses or contact registrar@brookings.edu.

Master of Science in Global Leadership and Strategy

The earlier Master of Science in Leadership program is being replaced to reflect the broader dimensions of leadership in the 21st century. WashU at Brookings is currently developing a unique, new degree that combines the innovative curriculum of the university's Olin Business School and the cutting-edge research of the Brookings Institution.

Much of the content for the 12-month program will be delivered online. To increase diverse perspectives and connections across sectors, students will be recruited from government, business, and nonprofit organizations around the world.

More information on the program will be available at www.brookings.edu/master-of-science-in-global-leadership.

Supporting Veterans

Build on the wide-ranging skills you developed in the military to excel as a leader in civilian government.

Courses

Leadership Courses

Accountability for Results

Results matter – to Congress, the administration, and the American public. The ability to demonstrate positive outcomes helps your agency build trust and secure resources. The course addresses organizational, rather than individual, performance issues. You acquire diagnostic tools for improving and measuring enterprise-wide results.

Date: June 15-16, 2020

Tuition: $1,995

Communicating for Success

Improving your communication skills enhances your ability to lead. Learn how to convey information more clearly, concisely, and authentically. Effective communication also helps you create buy-in with a diverse group of stakeholders from different cultural and professional backgrounds.

Date: December 11-12, 2019

Tuition: $1,995

Conflict Resolution

Conflict is a fact of organizational life. But persistent disputes can sap morale, damage professional relationships, and impede results. The course teaches you alternative approaches to diagnosing and resolving conflicts. It begins with an assessment of your personal conflict style. You use the assessment to identify your behavior patterns during stressful situations. Structured exercises enable you to practice and receive feedback on your new skills.

Date: June 1-2, 2020

Tuition: $1,995

Continual Learning and Change

How will your agency navigate in a budget-constrained, fast-paced environment? Success requires strategic foresight, adaptability, agility, and the ability to get your organization where it needs to go. The course introduces you to the concept of a learning organization and the culture and people who support it.

Date: September 18-19, 2019

Tuition: $1,995

NEW!

Courageous Leadership

(formerly a component of Daring to Lead)

The organizations of tomorrow will need courageous leaders to guide their people through unprecedented adversity and change. In this fast-paced and highly interactive class, you learn the essential elements of courage and the skill set required to boost them.

For millennia, philosophers and psychologists have differentiated four types of courage: physical, social, moral, and creative. Each type is critical to courageous leadership. Physical courage is the ability to control your physical self to maintain courage “under fire.” Social courage is the power to remain strong against pressures to conform. Moral courage means doing what is right, instead of what is expedient. Creative courage is the courage to lead people into the uncharted territory of the future.

Date: May 18-19, 2020

Tuition: $1,995

Note to Master of Science in Leadership students:
The Courageous Leadership course fulfills half of the two-credit-hour required Daring to Lead class.

Tamzin Smith

Creativity in Organizations

Leaders who think creatively – and who cultivate that ability in themselves and their teams – add great value to their organizations and society. During the course, you learn that creativity is a teachable process, not simply an innate talent. You also engage in a variety of experiential activities that build your idea formulation and development skills and help you make these skills a habit.

Date: November 13-14, 2019

Tuition: $1,995

Cross-Cultural Connections: Leveraging Diversity

Consider the challenges of the 21st century: national security risks, humanitarian and natural disasters, revolutionary technological advances, and the unprecedented pace of change. Increasingly, professionals like you are being called on to be globally competent. The course teaches you how diverse perspectives keep organizational thinking flexible and responsive. It also examines how inclusiveness promotes teamwork and differences can be leveraged to improve performance.

Date: June 3-4, 2020

Tuition: $1,995

Customer Service

How can your agency meet or exceed growing customer expectations, even with limited resources? For starters, you must learn a new lexicon that describes the relationship between citizens and the government. The course introduces you to a framework that explores the roles of citizens, frontline workers, and leaders. The class also explains how you can improve the quality of your service. Takeaways include a dynamic customer focus that improves organizational performance.

Date: September 9-10, 2019

Tuition: $1,995

Ethics in Action: Leading with Integrity

Gain greater self-awareness, tools for moral reasoning, and a robust ethical framework for everyday decision making. The course explores the meaning of integrity, values, and beliefs and how they shape behaviors and direct actions. Class discussions examine the responsibilities of public service and matters of public interest.

Date: October 23-24, 2019

Tuition: $1,995

Developing Others: Leader as Coach

One of your most important responsibilities as a manager or executive is developing leadership bench strength within your agency. Leadership development prepares the next generation of government professionals for 21st century governing challenges. The course provides strategies for creating a robust leadership pipeline and coaching employees at all levels of their careers.

Flexibility and Decisiveness

As a leader, you sometimes make decisions in a context of uncertainty – when pertinent information is unavailable or unknown. Internal and national politics, evolving technology, and global events add to decision-making complexity. As a result, knowing when to be flexible and when to be decisive is critical. The course outlines the two different approaches to decision making and provides a framework for their use. Employing the right approach at the right time increases individual, team, and organizational productivity.

Organizational Alignment: Connecting Strategy and Values

(formerly a component of Daring to Lead)

The course teaches you how to strategically align your agency's mission, goals, and purpose. Alignment occurs when the three elements reinforce each other, providing a clearer organizational vision and results. Alignment helps you organize agency activities and individuals to support strategic direction.

The course also introduces you to several frameworks and processes that enable you to understand how each part of your organization fits into the broader strategy. When you bring strategy into your employees' daily work, organizational change can take root. Participants discuss how alignment requires specific, value-based decisions; personal leadership change; and collaboration to ensure a commitment to change priorities.

Date: June 9-10, 2020

Tuition: $1,995

Note to Master of Science in Leadership students:
The Organizational Alignment course fulfills half of the two-credit-hour required Daring to Lead class.

Problem Solving Through Critical Thinking

When they tackle complex challenges, management teams often end up solving the wrong problem, wasting time and resources, and impeding results. Learn how to find, frame, and formulate problems and eliminate biases that affect your decisions. Course content emphasizes the application of critical-thinking processes to your specific agency experiences.

Date: April 6-7, 2020

Resilience in Leadership

Research indicates that people's habits of thinking directly affect how they respond to challenges and opportunities.

Negative habits can undermine the success individuals work so hard to achieve. The course describes the seven factors that comprise resilience, four practical skills that make your thinking more flexible and accurate, and the five characteristics that define a resilient leader. You learn how to model resilience, mentor your people in resilience, and create a workplace where your employees' resilience can flourish.

Date: May 20-21, 2020

Tuition: $1,995

Strategic Thinking: Driving Long-Term Success

Engaging in strategic thinking before you develop your strategic plan enables you to pinpoint organizational challenges and opportunities. The course provides a strategic thinking framework you can use to inform your agency's investments in people and processes as well as the trade-offs you make because of limited resources. The course also introduces you to the steps involved in strategy implementation.

Leadership Labs

The federal government has used Executive Core Qualifications (ECQs) to develop members of the Senior Executive Service for 30 years. Although many of the competencies are timeless, other competencies must adapt to the dramatic changes that have occurred in the fields of leadership, technology, management, and strategy.

WashU at Brookings is launching several Leadership Labs to provide you with new tools and thinking to excel as leaders.

NEW!

Agile Organization: Tools to Manage Disruption and Change

Agile organizations seem to have burst on the scene in the federal government. In reality, agile methods date back to the 1960s. The U.S. government initiated many of the practices, which involved software programming. Simultaneously, many organizational designs outside of IT emerged during the 1960s to 1980s. In the ensuing decades, agile organizations have become a growing way to organize and manage many kinds of government activities.

The daylong lab introduces you to the challenges and opportunities of adopting and running an agile government organization.

Data Analytics for Public Leaders

Every organization must adapt to a data-driven world, where decisions are based on fundamental business logic as well as real-time and high-dimensional data. Data science is the process of making these data-informed and data-driven decisions. The process requires that leaders understand the technological platform of data acquisition, storage, and manipulation. It also requires knowledge of data-driven decision-making techniques, their advantages, and their disadvantages.

The first half of the lab provides a framework for data-driven decision making. The second half of the lab examines two major analysis tools. You are taught how to apply these techniques to different types of problems and examine the advantages and disadvantages of each technique.

Operational Excellence: Business Practices for Government Results

Projects serve as vehicles for organizational innovation and change. To achieve positive results, projects must establish their value proposition and be planned and executed effectively. Successful projects also require support from multiple stakeholders, who almost always have conflicting interests.

The one-day lab introduces you to project management and helps you lead change in your agency. During the morning session, you examine what constitutes positive results.

The afternoon session focuses on advanced stakeholder-management methods. As a result, you are better able to sustain long-term relationships with key stakeholders and implement organizational changes, strategic initiatives, and major projects.

Strategic Foresight: Anticipating the Future

The lab helps you cultivate strategic foresight. More specifically, it provides tools to predict how changes in technology, demographics, the environment, and society affect your agency. Recognizing where and how these changes are likely to occur – and developing capabilities to respond to them in a timely and cost-effective manner – is critical for your agency's long-term success.

Content draws on forecasting methods and scenario planning, along with an analysis of large-scale trends, such as the aging population and artificial intelligence. Consequently, you develop a more informed perspective on prospective events and the uncertainty involved in your attempts to understand them. Finally, the lab explores the individual and organizational biases that underpin the Cassandra syndrome – the tendency of organizations to dismiss valid concerns – and how they can be overcome.

Policy Courses

Inside Congress

Acquire behind-the-scenes knowledge of Capitol Hill and the legislative process. During the course, you engage with current and former members of Congress, congressional staff members, media correspondents, lobbyists, and other key decision makers. You also walk the corridors of the Capitol, observe floor action, and attend committee hearings. The course provides you with an in-depth understanding of how Congress really works.

Dates: July 15-18, 2019
September 16-19, 2019
May 4-7, 2020

Tuition: $2,075

Inside the White House

Enacting legislation on Capitol Hill is only part of the policymaking process. Congress regularly enacts vague laws, leaving policy details to the discretion of executive branch agencies. The policy process also includes the White House agenda – formally, through the budget, or informally, through the president's bully pulpit. Rules, regulations, and executive orders can significantly affect an organization's bottom line. The course focuses on the many dimensions of executive power and their effect on your enterprise.

Dates: November 4-5, 2019

NEW!

Inside the Judiciary

Appointed by the executive branch and confirmed by the legislative branch, the judicial branch has the mandate to determine the constitutionality of the law and provide equal justice under the law. The judicial branch is the least defined of the three branches of government. The constitution establishes one Supreme Court and other courts "as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish." During the one-day class, you acquire an inside look into the judiciary and its role in the constitutional system. Designed to complement the Inside Congress and Inside the White House courses, the new class explores the intersection of policy and law in the third pillar of government. You learn about the federal court system, the types of cases brought before the judiciary, and the judiciary's relationships with the other branches of government.

Insider's Budget Process

The in-depth course examines the federal budget process and the formulation of the president's budget, the congressional budget, and appropriations. You receive a comprehensive overview of the policy decisions involved, and you determine how to best position your organization during funding decisions. In addition, you learn how nongovernmental organizations engage in important budget deliberations.

Date: February 10-11, 2020

Tuition: $1,995

Insider's Legs and Regs

Gain a more sophisticated understanding of the legislative policy formulation process and the regulatory policy implementation process. The course is designed for senior-level professionals who already are familiar with the workings of Congress. Speakers cover topics such as markup sessions and the Office of Management and Budget's Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs' reviews. You come away from the course with the strategic knowledge to advance your organization's legislative and regulatory agendas.

Date: October 22-23, 2019

Tuition: $1,995

Politics and Policymaking

How can you predict changes in government policies? And what strategies can you employ to leverage these changes? The course explains the policymaking process and provides new thinking on policy formulation in the legislative and executive branches of government. In addition, the class prepares you to monitor and analyze political trends so your organization can anticipate and effectively engage in policy debates.

U.S. National Security Strategy

The United States faces a world of volatility, uncertainty, complexity, and ambiguity. Challenges come from numerous factors and actors – including the growing power of China and India, a shift in power from Atlantic to Pacific regions, North Korea's rogue weapons program, cyberwarfare, humanitarian and natural disasters, and terrorist organizations. During the course, you explore new security-policy strategies with experts in the field.

Global Economic Policy

Responsible for about one-fourth of global GDP, the U.S. economy is the largest in the world. The health of the U.S. economy affects the global economy. But the global economy's performance is vitally important to the United States as well. The course provides an overview of economic policy issues, along with the ongoing debates that accompany them. Topics include international trade, financial risk management, emerging capital markets, tax policy, regional financial issues, labor, and demographics.

Global Studies

Africa

Policymakers and financial stakeholders are drawn to the myriad ways global economic interdependency is unfolding in Africa – a continent rich in natural resources. The United States' national interests in Africa are broad and include terrorist threats, global health epidemics, food security, humanitarian assistance, rule-of-law initiatives, and security assistance. The course raises several important questions: What role should the United States play in the region? Is AFRICOM accomplishing U.S. strategic objectives? And how will the United States' increased focus on the Asia Pacific region and China's increased engagement with Africa affect U.S. political, economic, and security concerns in Africa?
